Angry Birds: To Facebook and Beyond!

Rovio CEO Mikael Hed said that the crazily popular game by Rovio is coming to Facebook next month. Angry Birds has had unprecedented success in the mobile gaming industry. It's made 10s of millions of dollars in the little over a year that it's been out. No other iPhone game has come close to that number.

Other game developers have to be jealous of its success. It started out as an iPhone app. Then, it came out on android and an iPad version was launched. Next, versions go out to Nokia, Palm, PCs, PSP/PS3, and even Windows Phone 7. They've got movie tie-ins, an animated series, an even a 3D version being worked on. Finally, they'll be a version of it on the most popular social networking site in the world.

Facebook is a casual gaming platform in which Angry Birds will thrive. Facebook is already the responsible party for the stomach churning success of annoying and addicting (for some) game, Farmville. Now, an already established game will be coming to Facebook? There's only one word for it. Dominance. Angry Birds has domain over all of the mobile gaming world and everyone wants to have a game like that. There's no other word to describe their influence...they're just dominant.

1 Million MacBook Airs Ship First Quarter

An estimated 1.1 million new MacBook Airs shipped last quarter. Now, Apple doesn't release actual numbers for each system in its Mac family, but Apple did say that it shipped over 2.9 million total Mac systems in the 4th quarter. That would mean that the MacBook Airs captured about 40% of its total Mac sales...a very suprising number.

Most people write off the MacBook Air as a novelty computer but they don't realize how fast that Flash storage really is. The MacBook Air might not be a super computer like the new MacBook Pros but they're plenty fast enough for daily, personal use for anybody. Plus, it's one of the most stylish computers out there.

The estimated numbers would make the ultra-thin, ultra-portable MacBook, one of Apple's most successful product launches ever.
