

Domestic Violence Service Provider Interviews

Key Findings

The Help Line works as an important tool in linking victims to resources

- 92 % found the Help Line useful or very useful

High marks to the Help Line for accessibility and quality of information

- The toll-free number is simple, easy to memorize, and available 24 hours
- Up-to-date information about a wide range of services
- It's an efficient way for a victim to find a shelter
- VIRAS are "great staff" who are both "knowledgeable" and "sensitive"

The majority find having one centralized number a key feature

- 90% rated this feature useful or very useful
- Less than 10% rated it somewhat or not useful

"It is helpful to have one central number that is well publicized, that police can give out. But the interaction (with the VIRA) has to be comforting and just as helpful, because sometimes it's really difficult to make the phone call in the first place." -A Provider Interviewee

Service Providers Make Referrals to the Help Line

- 82% reported making referrals to the Help Line, averaging 18 per month
- Most found making referrals very easy, average rating 1.23 (1=very easy)
- 83% who worked in the field prior to the Help Line reported that making referrals is easier now than before the Help Line existed

Service Providers Receive Referrals from the Help Line

- Providers reported that their agencies received anywhere from 0 to 300 referrals from the Help Line per month, averaging 20 referrals/month across all agencies
- Most reported that receiving referrals was not difficult. Average rating 1.61 (1= not difficult at all)

The Help Line Assists Service Providers to Extend their Own Resources

Over half of the providers use the Help Line for services beyond receiving and making referrals, such as:

- Getting updated and current general information about availability of other services
- Getting information on citywide shelter bed availability, and geographic locations of agencies
- Using the Help Line language line when there are no staff or volunteers available who can meet the language needs of a particular client

Additional Suggestions about the Help Line

- Maintain and expand advertising and outreach about the Help Line and domestic violence
- Ensure information about community provider agency services is current
- Continue updating shelter bed availability
- Develop alternative feedback loop for referral reports between community providers and Help Line

The Study

In 2005, 74 staff from 55 Chicago area domestic violence service provider agencies participated in a telephone interview with a CURL researcher.

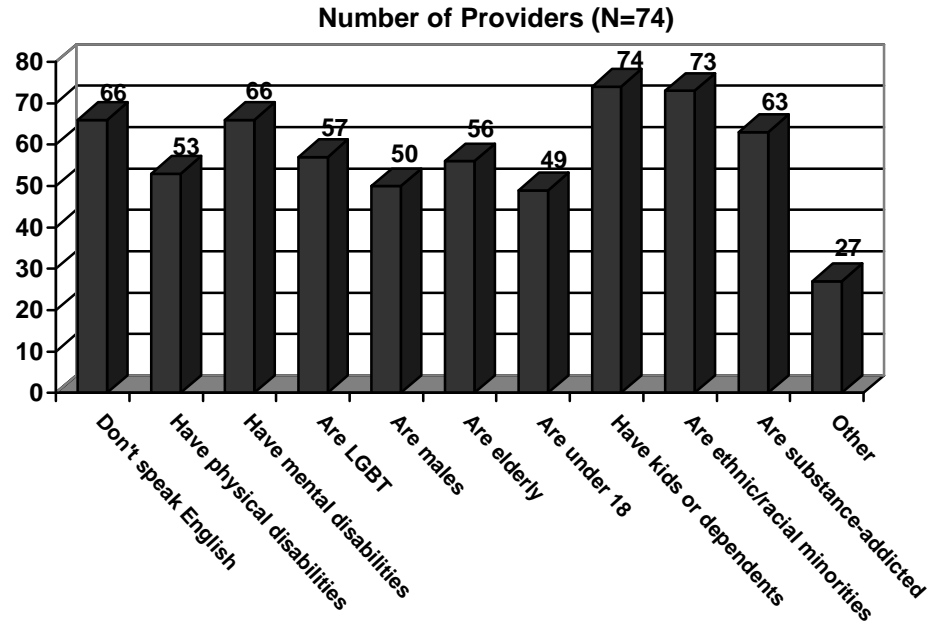

Services provided by Interviewed Agencies

75% walk-in counseling
77% crisis counseling
59% legal advocacy
20% legal services
24 % shelter

Staff Interviewed

57% Program-staff (e.g. Case Worker, Counselor, Intake Coordinator);
31% Program Directors
7% Executive Directors
5% other administrative
All interviewed had first-hand knowledge of the Help Line.

Provider's Perception of Victim Difficulties to Accessing Community Based Services

Providers' examples of particular difficulties that victims in various circumstances face

Victims who don't speak English

- Lack of translators in various systems that victims have to navigate
- Fear of and difficulty with immigration system

Victims who have physical disabilities

- Some agencies/shelters' sites not accessible
- Difficult to flee from an unsafe situation

Victims who have mental disabilities

- Agencies may not have the training to provide the expertise needed to serve victims who also have mental health issues
- In particular, shelters may not be able to provide the "higher level of care" required to serve and support individuals with mental disabilities

Victims who are LGBT

- Lack of specific services: Victims not always feeling comfortable and safe or feeling isolated and "different"
- Discrimination: Some court personnel and providers in the DV community still hold negative attitudes towards LGBT clients

Victims who are males

- Lack of specific services
- Being taken seriously: Sometimes have to "jump through extra hoops" to prove they're victims

Victims who are elderly

- Limited financial or physical autonomy
- Isolation; referred to as "the hidden group"

Victims who are under 18

- The need for parental consent to receive services
- Youths' denial that they are experiencing abuse

Victims who have dependent children

- Difficulty in finding placement for women with very young babies, large families and/or boys over 12
- Lack of childcare: Difficult for victims to follow-up with appointments, or to seek employment opportunities

Victims who are ethnic/racial minorities

- Victims feeling that they are not understood or accepted by staff or other victims
- Immigrant victims being unfamiliar with social systems and not knowing what resources are available

Victims who are substance-addicted

- Disconnect between Substance Abuse and Domestic Violence Service Providers
- Abstinence based shelter system
- Limited treatment options

